New Rule Changes

For Truck Drivers and Crane and Derrick Operators

There are going to be a few changes starting on November 8, 2010 for Crane and Derricks in Construction. OSHA has amended Part 1926 Subpart CC and involves equipment with rated hoisting and lifting capacity over 2,000 pounds to include truck mounted hydraulic cranes and articulating knuckle booms. Important changes include operator training and certification that states "Only Operators who have been certified by an accredited program will be considered OPERATORS." Any one else will be considered operators in training (with a certified operator) that must become certified within the four year phase in period that will end November 10, 2014. Additionally Signal Persons and Riggers who work with crane operators are also trained and qualified along with Fall Protection, Management of the worksite adjacent to the crane operation and working distances from power lines.

The Federal Motor Carrier Safety Administration

Is set to adopt the Comprehensive Safety Analysis program (CSA2010) this will focus not only on the carrier but the individual drivers. This should improve the safety of commercial carriers and their drivers. A scoring system will allow public safety officials to identify and target poor performing carriers and drivers and encourage better care of the equipment by the carrier and driver training. Effective dates have not been announced so far but should be sometime in mid 2011.
